LOCAL FAMILY HELPING PARENTS PROTECT THEIR CHILDREN ONLINE

BRANSON MO - OCTOBER 5, 2016 – As parents we all have blind spots. We can't see them, that's why they're called blind spots. Sometimes those blindspots cause mild annoyance to those around us. Like the parent who lets their kid eat what they want all the time and then has a picky eater that everyone has to cater to. It's not life changing or dangerous. Just annoying. Some blindspots aren't just annoying, though, some are very very dangerous and internet safety and security is one such dangerous blindspot. Unfortunately it's one of the most common blindspots for parents as well.

My name is Michael Prince. My wife and I currently live, with our four children, in a motorhome and travel the US doing ministry to families. After three years of working to inspire parents to be the first influence in the lives of their children my wife, Melinda and I (Michael) have focused on the blindspot of internet security and accountability.

The dangers of adult content, predators, cyber bullying, and so much more that are available to our children online inspired us to write a book entitled "What's in Your Pocket? 'A parent's guide to protecting your children online.'" The book inspires parents to take internet security seriously and equips them with some simple steps that they should take to allow their kids to browse and be social online more safely. We are now taking the contents of that book and making free workshops available to families in the Ozarks.

While we offer full service device set-up for a fee, we are doing these informational workshops at no cost. Think Mary-Kay Party but with the goal of increasing your knowledge about protecting your children when they are on their many screens. We often see news stories focusing on victims of dangerous online activity but we would like to provide a solution. These simple workshops can help parents better understand the security capabilities in their phones, tablets, and computers and give them tips to begin to set those devices up.
